1. Driver Certificate of Professional Competence

If you want to drive a Bus or Truck for a living, new rules apply from 10th September 2008 for Bus drivers and from 10th September 2009 for Truck drivers. From these respective dates, you must hold a Driver Certificate of Professional Competence (Driver CPC) in order to work as a professional driver.

A person who has already passed a driving test in licence category D or C and takes out a driving licence before the relevant date will have an entitlement to the Driver CPC which is valid for a five year period. However, you are required to complete one day's training per year.

The Driver CPC Theory Test will have two parts – Part one is a Core exam common to both Bus and Truck, consisting of 100 multiple choice questions and lasting two hours. Part two is a specialist case study exam for either a Bus or Truck containing three case studies lasting two and a quarter hours with fifteen multiple choice questions for each case study. Part one & Part two for a Bus OR Truck Test (or a Bus AND Truck) can be scheduled separately on different dates or on the same day.

If you wish to apply for a Bus AND Truck CPC you are only required to pass the MCQ theory test (part 1) once and it will count towards both, however you must complete the individual Case Studies theory test (part 2) for Bus AND Truck.

For more information on Driver CPC please visit www.theorytest.ie or www.rsa.ie and click on the Driver CPC icon.
